2nd WORLD AMATEUR GOLF TEAM CHAMPIONSHIP
for the Eisenhower Trophy
Merion Golf Club
Ardmore, Pennsylvania, United States of America
September 28 - October 1, 1960

The President and the Champions
THE 1960 TEAM CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE WORLD AMATEUR GOLF COUNCIL

It was a happy turn of events that took the 1960 World Amateur Team Championship to the Merion Golf Club, in the suburbs of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in the United States. Merion supplied in abundant measure the two main necessities for such an occasion as the second playing for the Eisenhower Trophy — first, a warmth of hospitality and, second, a great golf course.

The spirit of the meeting is reflected in a few examples such as the following:...

...Of the 126 players from 32 countries, 71 came to know Americans better as guests in the homes of members of Merion and other clubs. Private housing was provided for all players who requested it, as well as for a number of players' wives and officials.

...Every competitor played with eight others from eight different countries, with a few exceptions.

Merion ladies furnished private transportation, from early morning until night. All players were provided free caddie service and lunches, with breakfast for early starters, thanks to a Hospitality Fund of more than $18,000 contributed by eight American business firms and more than 250 Member Clubs of the United States Golf Association. (Amateur status rules permit acceptance of expenses in such international events.)

...The Pine Valley Golf Club invited all players for a day of informal fun over its world-famous course after the Championship.

Thus the atmosphere was warm, friendly and ideal for soving seeds of good will and peace. Although good will and peace cannot be measured in the way that a golf score can be measured, they were present in full supply throughout that week ending October 1, 1960. The events at Merion will not change the course of world history. But the spirit of Merion is the same quiet force that has always brought man closer to man. That was the meaning of Merion.

Fantastic Scoring by Americans

The second main ingredient for a fine Championship — that is, a great golf course — was provided completely by the Merion East Course. Merion has entertained many championships, and all the great golfers who have played it have a wholesome regard for its requirements in golfing tactics.

First Away. Jean Pierre Cros, of France, plays the opening stroke of the Championship.
Ben Hogan, in the midst of winning the 1950 United States Open Championship, remarked that no other course had kept him "so constantly on the defensive." Merion is by no means the longest of courses, measuring 6,694 yards, but it requires placement of shots from start to finish. Yet it is eminently fair—the lowest score ever made there was a 22 by Lee MacKenzie, Jr., a professional, in the 1960 United States Open; however, the lowest 72-hole score was 287—seven above par—by Ben Hogan, Lloyd Mangrum and George Fazio in tying in 1960.

Viewed against this background, the scoring of the United States team was fantastic in the second World Amateur Championship. The Americans' winning total was 894, 42 strokes better than Australia's second-place 936; Great Britain and Ireland was third with 881. This was in marked contrast to the first World Championship at St. Andrews in 1958; that event was notable for its closeness of competition, Australia winning in a play-off of a tie with the United States.

Merion's par is 70. It was broken eight times, all by the Americans; half of their 16 rounds were sub-par.

A team's score consists of the best three individual scores in each round. All of the Americans contributed to their team's victory—Deane Beman, aged 22; Robert W. Gardner, 39; William Hyndman, III, 44; Jack Nicklaus, 29. Their non-playing Captain was Totten P. Heffelfinger.

Here is how the United States' score was made:

It was a miraculous coincidence that the United States players happened to be at their peak simultaneously. There is no other way to account for the fact that all four finished among the five lowest scorers in a field that included the best amateur golfers in the world, among them being Joseph B. Carr, three-time British Champion; Bruce Devlin, of Australia; Robert Charles, of New Zealand, and Henri de Lamaze, of France.

There is no official competition for individual low score; the World Amateur Golf Council feels that the Championship should be strictly a team event, and that no man can serve two masters—his team and himself. It is not difficult to imagine a player confronted with a situation where he should play safely for the sake of his team but boldly for his personal glory.

Even so, the status of the individual leaders should be recorded: Nicklaus 269, Beman 282, Devlin of Australia 288, Gardner 289, Hyndman 290.

Nicklaus' four rounds of 66-67-68-68 constituted one of the greatest scoring performances in golf history. Although Merion's fairways were wider, the rough shorter and the greens softer than for the American Open, the course was a hard test. It was very wet and slow the first two days, play was tiresomely slow, and there was a strong wind the last day. Nicklaus was magnificent. In the first round he had a putt at a 64 but three-putted.
