1968 MEN’S TEAM CHAMPIONSHIP

The World Amateur Team Championship was begun in 1958 with the objective of promoting friendship and sportsmanship among peoples of the earth. Certainly through its first 10 years that purpose has been fulfilled.

That first decade seems to have had the additional effect of stimulating the development of golf throughout the world. Consider what happened in Melbourne, Australia, during October of 1968.

During the second round of the World Championship for the Eisenhower Trophy a score of 70 went up behind the name of Jalal Deran. Deran is from Malaysia, quite a small nation. That 70 gave him a 36-hole score of 146, and by contrast, Bruce Fleisher, the United States Amateur Champion, had played the first two rounds in 77-76—153.

Also consider the case of the Republic of China. In the inaugural Championship played at St. Andrews, Scotland, in 1958, China finished 26th in a field of 29 teams. In Melbourne it finished eighth. China has eight golf courses.

Clearly, then, the standards of play are rising as the game expands.

Golf still is dominated, though, by the English-speaking nations. No others have finished higher than fifth in the Team Championship.

The United States won at Melbourne, by one stroke over Great Britain and Ireland, 868-869. Canada was third with 885, and Australia, the host nation and defending Champion, was fourth with 886. The competition was played over the Royal Melbourne Golf Club's course.

The Championship was decided on the very last green, and it gave the United States its first Eisenhower Trophy victory since 1962. The putt that Richard L. Siderowf holed for the United States was the decisive stroke of the event, but it was a team effort to which everyone contributed—Fleisher, Jack Lewis, and Marvin (Vinny) Giles III, with an especial contribution from William C. Campbell, the non-playing Captain.

A 68 by Kevin Donahue paced Australia to a score of 216 in the first round and a lead of two strokes over Great Britain and Ireland. The United States then was four strokes behind with 220.

A 68 by Giles and 69 by Lewis vaulted the United States into the lead, 431-433 over Great Britain and Ireland in the second round. Australia, meanwhile, had dropped back to 438.

Michael Bonallack, Britain’s great amateur, then scored a superb 66 in the third round, Ronald D.B.M. Shade added 70, Gordon Cosh 71, and Britain shot ahead with a 54-hole team score of 640 against the 647 of the United States. Peter Oosterhuis had the bad fortune to shoot 72, a most useless score ordinarily, but see it not count toward the team total, for in this competition only the three lowest scores of each four-man team count each day.

Britain and Ireland that day had a total of 207, a score that was not matched through the Championship.

Thus, going into the final round the United States was seven strokes behind, a seemingly hopeless position. Bonallack, though, in that final round went from 66 to 76, Oosterhuis had another 76, and Cosh’s 79 didn’t count.

Fleisher had come in with 75 for the Americans, Giles had scored 73, and Lewis’ 78 was thrown out.

This left the decision up to Siderowf and Shade, who were grouped together. The Fleisher and Giles scores had helped the United States pick up four strokes and the Americans were now just three strokes behind with Siderowf and Shade still on the course.
Lowest scorers. Marvin Giles III, of the United States (top), and Michael F. Bonallack, of Great Britain and Ireland (bottom) had the lowest individual scores of 286 for 72 holes.

The Putt that Missed. Ronald D. B. M. Shade, of Great Britain and Ireland, missed a putt on the final hole at the Royal Melbourne Golf Club that could have won a tie for his team.

It looked good for Britain when Sidewof came out 30 feet from the hole while Shade chipped up six feet away. Siderowf's first putt still left him three feet away, and now Shade had the opportunity to save the day for the British. If he should miss the put and Siderowf, Britain would win the Cup. If they both holed, the teams would tie. If he should miss and Siderowf hole, the United States would win.

Siderowf tapped the putt. It ran true to the hole, nipped a piece of it, and stayed out. Siderowf holed his putt and the Championship was over. The United States had won for the third time.

Individual honors are not awarded in the World Team Championships but it should be noted that Bonallack and Giles had scores of 286 over a very fine golf course. Siderowf and Oosterhuis shared the second best score of 289.

The Australian Golf Union, with Alex A. Mills as President and William H. Richardson as Secretary, was a most affable host, and the hospitality of the Australian Ladies' Golf Union, with Mrs. T. R. Street as President and Miss Phyllis Perry, Honorary Secretary, was unsurpassed. Thomas B. Swanson was President of the Victoria Golf Club, where the Women's Championship was played, Fred J. Dawborn was Captain, and John D. S. J. C. Robson was Honorary Secretary.

Delegates and Duffers Cup
At each Championship, officials of the host association, non-playing Captains, and Delegates to the World Amateur Golf Council meet in a 36-hole handicap competition for the Delegates and Duffers Cup. The Cup was won for the second time by Hord W. Hardin, of the United States, with a score of 78-75.

Meeting of World Council
The biennial meeting of the World Amateur Golf Council was held at the Royal Melbourne Golf Club on October 8, 1968.

Among the actions were:
1. Decision that invitations to entertain a Championship must include a condition that the host Member Organization would invite and be willing to accept teams from all Member Organizations.
2. Acceptance of the invitation of Spain to entertain both men's and women's Championships in 1970.
3. The frequency of the Women's Championships to be decided at a later date.

THE 1968 WOMEN'S TEAM CHAMPIONSHIP

Golf, as we know it today, is traceable directly to Scotland where it was played on the dunesland off the North Sea at least as early as the 16th century. As the game spread it gradually moved inland, and now most courses of the world are placed not on the dunesland, or linksland, but in park-like settings well away from the sea.

It was entirely appropriate then that the courses selected for the 1968 World Amateur Team Championship and the Women's World Amateur Team Championship were laid out on the same kind of land as their ancestors.

The Women's Championship for the Espirito Santo Trophy was played at the Victoria Golf Club, Cheltenham, Victoria, in the Melbourne sand belt near Port Philip Bay. Except for the tea trees and other foliage that frame most holes, you might be back in Scotland. Bunkers are large, deep, and plentiful—you have only to dig a hole and you strike sand—and the greens are firm, fast, and hard to hold when they're dry.

One other feature distinguishes Scottish courses—the weather. The wind nearly always sweeps in off the sea, bringing with it cold and rain. The Australian weather cooperated perfectly. Wet, cold, and windy weather prevailed throughout the Women's Championship, and hailstones battered the course one day.

Teams representing 17 countries participated, and the United States won for the second consecutive time. The final total for the United States was 616. Australia was second with 621, and France third with 622.

The American victory was a real team effort. Each member contributed to the scoring and encouraged her team-mates.

From the beginning the Championship was among the United States, France, and Australia. France had the same three players who won the first Championship in 1964—Miss Catherine Lacoste, Miss Brigitte Varangot, and Mrs. Claudine Cros Rubin—and they tied the United States in the first round with 156. Australia, with Miss Elizabeth Blackmore, Miss Marea Hickey, and Mrs. Ray Thomas, was two strokes behind with 158.

France went ahead by two strokes over Australia in the second round, 308-510, and the United States fell another two strokes behind. A 75 by Mrs. David Welts, and 76s by Miss Jane Bastanchury and Miss Shelley Hamlin brought the United States back into the tie for the lead with Australia after 54 holes, with France one stroke behind. Australia and the United States had 463, France 464.

Steadiness in the gusty winds carried the day for the Americans. Miss Hamlin had her lowest score of the Championship, a 75, and Miss Bastanchury had 78 for the counting scores, giving the United States 153 for the day. Australia's counting scores were 77 and 81 for 158, and France had 76 and 82 for another 158.

Par of 73 for the 6,040-yard course was never threatened; the best scores were eight 73s. Miss Lacoste had two of them and a final 72-hole score of 307, lowest in the field. Miss Hickey, also with two 75s, was a stroke back with 308, and Miss Hamlin's 309 was third best.

Caddies for the ladies Championship were volunteer amateur golfers who pulled caddie carts. The Victorian Ladies Golf Union recruited them from its membership. Fifty-one were needed for the eight days of practice and play, and 71 responded.

Attendance was especially encouraging. An estimated 3,500 spectators attended, about the same as for the Men's Championship.

Flag Raising. Members of each team in the Women's Championship stand with their country's flag in ceremonies before the competition began.

Low for Australia. Miss Marea Hickey scored two rounds of 75 and helped Australia take second place.

Race-setter for the United States. Miss Shelley Hamlin had a score of 309 and led the United States Team to its victory.

First-Choice Golf Club
Golf has been proud of many of its traits; the challenge it presents to the individual, the sportsmanship it breeds, the good fellowship, and the fact that it is a game that can be played for a lifetime. Never is that latter trait more evident than in Senior competition.

Senior golf has been with us for a long time, but it seems to be increasing annually, and in 1967 a World Senior Team Championship was added to the competitions conducted by the World Amateur Golf Council.

The inaugural event was played at the Pinehurst Country Club, Pinehurst, North Carolina, that year. The second Championship was held at the Old Course at St. Andrews, Scotland, in October of 1969.

The team of Curtis Person Sr., David (Spec) Goldman, Merrill Carlsmith, and Robert Loufek scored 908 for 72 holes and won the 1969 event by 21 strokes over Canada, with 929.

Goldman’s opening round 75 paced the American team to a 230-235 lead over Great Britain and Ireland, and from then on the United States only added to its lead. The Americans led, 456-467 over Canada after the second round, and 679-700 over Canada after the third round.

Thirteen teams competed for the Shun Nomura Trophy, two more than in 1967. Goldman followed his opening 75 with 73 in the second round, then 74 and 76 for a 72-hole total of 298, lowest in the field. Dr. George Bigelow of Canada had the highest score, 378, as Canada finished 11th. The same team finished last in 1967.
